Maggie Dillon

Maggie brings a unique understanding of how leadership, teamwork, and social dynamics converge to her work at Nvolv. She relies on these insights heavily as she helps to create and implement client programs, manage logistics, and provide overall project support for our client engagements.

Before joining Nvolv, Maggie worked as a support consultant with Brimstone Consulting Group. Additionally, she has experience in creating and implementing programs, communications, cross-cultural teamwork, and leadership, as well as planning and delivering events to raise funds and awareness.

During college, Maggie co-led summer intern program at the Western Organization for People Living with HIV/AIDS (WOPLAH) in Mumias, Kenya. The team conducted research, created educational tools and designed a monitoring program for the organization. She also served on the board and as co-president of GlobeMed—a student-led global health organization.

Maggie holds a BA in Sociology from Colorado College in Colorado Springs and previously had attended the National Outdoor Leadership School in Northern India. When not working at Nvolv, Maggie is a practicing doula and volunteers in the NICU at the NewYork-Presbyterian hospital in Brooklyn, New York, the city she now calls home.
