

Maggie Dillon

Maggie brings a unique understanding of how leadership, teamwork, and social dynamics converge to her work at Nvolv. She regularly taps into these insights to design, lead, and implement programs while providing overall management for her client engagements. Maggie is recognized for her collaborative approach, building meaningful relationships, and finding creative ways to meet client objectives through program design.

In her earlier work with Nvolv, she provided logistics and project support to client engagements. Before joining Nvolv, Maggie was a support consultant with Brimstone Consulting Group. Additionally, she has experience creating and implementing programs, communications, cross-cultural teamwork, and leadership, as well as planning and delivering events to raise funds and awareness.

During college, Maggie co-led a summer intern program at the Western Organization for People Living with HIV/AIDS (WOPLAH). The team conducted research, created educational tools, and designed a monitoring program for the organization. She also served on the board and as co-president of the Colorado College Chapter of GlobeMed—a student-led global health organization.

Maggie holds a BA in Sociology with a focus on Global Health from Colorado College in Colorado Springs. She has lived in Mumias, Kenya, while working for the Western Organization for People Living with HIV/AIDS (WOPLAH) and spent time in Northern India with the National Outdoor Leadership School (NOLS). In addition to her work at Nvolv, Maggie is a certified doula and volunteered in the NICU at the NewYork-Presbyterian hospital in Brooklyn, New York. Maggie and her wife make their home in Chicago, where they enjoy spending time with extended family.
